Medical examinations for New Zealand visa applicants

Immigration New Zealand is changing the way it carries out medical examinations for visa applicants in New Zealand.

At the moment, a visa applicant can complete their immigration medical examination with any registered doctor in New Zealand.

Immigration New Zealand is now moving to a new system called eMedical, and specific medical and radiology clinics have been selected to complete immigration medicals.

From 31 March 2015, visa applicants in New Zealand can:

- complete their immigration medical examination at one of the eMedical or radiology clinics on Immigration New Zealand's onshore panel, listed on the website
- have a look at Immigration New Zealand's website www.immigration.govt.nz/healthinfo for information to support them with their immigration medical examination appointment.

There will be a transition period until 30 June 2015, where applicants may have a paper medical certificate completed by any registered New Zealand physician.

Where to find information

For more information about Immigration New Zealand eMedical enabled clinics in your area where you can complete an immigration medical examination, visit: www.immigration.govt.nz/healthinfo and find the approved list under 'Approved panel physicians' on this page.
